Excerpt from A Modern Plan: Upon Which the Minds and Manners of Youth May Be Formed; Or a Compendium of Moral Institutes Made Familiar, and Adapted to the Circumstances of the Present Age

To Parents, Guardians and Tutors.

A Performance of this nature requires no apology. The design none can condemn: though the execution of it many may censure. But this would have been the case had it been drawn up by the ablest hand. The Author would not have published this plan, if he had not had a good opinion of it himself; and likewise presumed, that there might be others who would approve his little system.

The scheme has five divisions in it, viz.

- I. Of God's name;
- II. Of the human passions;
- III. Of the appetites;
- IV. Of the imagination; it's objects and operations.
- V. Of religious character; how attainable.

Under these heads, the prevailing vices of the age are exposed, and the rules of avoidance given.

It is free from party-opinions, and those disputable things which have been prejudicial to most catechetical compositions: so that it aims at universal use, whatever may be its success.

The most important notions and useful representations of God, are made easy and intelligible. And both the sentiments and language are such as may suit almost any age of instructions.

The branch of self-knowledge is somewhat laboured; and makes a principal part of the plan: upon which the growing virtue of the youth is supposed to depend.
