Sequoia and Kings Canyon National Parks include America's premier groves of giant sequoias and many of the world's largest trees. Native Americans knew of the sequoias long before Europeans found their way to the Americas. They were "discovered" by the hunter Thomas Dowd in 1852 while hunting for food in what is now Calaveras Big Trees State Park. This book details the ecology of the mighty trees and their history including logging. Outstanding and named sequoias are discussed.
