This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1879 edition. Excerpt: ... I give my first message entire: Fellow-Citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives: Being called by the voice of the people of this State to the highest office within their gift, it is with unfeigned distrust of my own abilities, and with the deepest sense of the great responsibility of the station, that I enter upon the duties which their kind partiality has assigned me. In entering upon them, all I can promise is, a determination to do all in my power for the public good, and faithfully and honestly to exert myself for the general prosperity of the State. And it affords me great pleasure to congratulate the immediate representatives of the people, on their being assembled here at this time, and delegated for the same common object. With our cordial co-operation, much good may be done, without which, little benefit can result from our labors. Before I perform my constitutional duty, in recommending such measures as may be deemed expedient, permit me to observe, that the condition of the people is prosperous and happy. Blessed with a fertile soil, and a healthy climate, in a region where nature has, with an unsparing hand, poured out her choicest blessings, our State is destined, at no distant day, to become one of the first in the confederacy. While we possess such exuberance of soil and mineral riches, we can also justly claim a superiority over most of the States, in our commercial facilities, by means of our navigable lakes and rivers. In the north-east through Lake Michigan, an outlet is offered to the Northern markets. The Wabash River on the east, and the Ohio on the south, both forming common boundaries between us and the adjacent States, present the means of intercommunication with the North and South, while the...
