Alan once more finds himself waking up on Brighton beach; only this time the pounding in his head hasn't come from alcohol. He's done something few have ever done, he's escaped from Hell! Desperate to find his wife, Alan heads for the last place he'd seen her; home. However, Mary no longer lives there as she now resides in a room where the beds come with restraints. Mary, like everyone, struggles to cope with reality. Only life has reserved its nastiest of tricks just for her. Meanwhile, Lucifer has taken a rare trip upstairs and is determined to drag Alan's sorry arse back down to Hell with him. But where to begin the look in country he despises most; Britain. So read the book the author's own brother described as "Not as bad as I thought it would be." A dark comedy full of twists and turns, love and loss, exorcising and exercising. You're in for one Hell of a ride.
