Not illustrated. 1852 Excerpt: ...that my home-ministry, in earlier years, did not suffer by missionary labor? Action and re-action have not always the relation of toil and weariness. A tree is the stouter and healthier for being exercised by the winds, and gentle strain on its roots only starts out additional fibres to take deeper and wider hold of the soil. What a blessed thing is activity! Blessed, especially, is activity in the open air, away from the necessity of constant study; and my memoranda testify to frequent relief-seasons of the sort in 210 GARDEN OF EDEN. the spring of 1837. The first Sunday in May I spent in Pottsville, the second in Hinkletown, Lancaster county--the intermediate days on the intermediate route, including Reading--nine sermons being the preaching part of the visitation. It was in a day of travel by stage-coaches--a means of conveyance which, with all its tedium as now regarded, had decided advantages over the modern way of getting through the world. Whirled through a deep cut here, over a ravine there, yonder through a tunnel, and everywhere hurried along as if the terminus was everything and the journey of little or nothing worth,--this modern method of travelling is too much like the notion that this world is 'a vale of tears,' endurable only by reason of the world to which we are traveling. It is well enough to hurry across a desert, by steam or wings, but there are too many beautiful valleys, and too much sublime hill-country, in both Pennsylvania and Life, to despise the journey by hurrying. The most beautiful sight in inanimate nature, is a cluster of fruit-trees in full blossom; the next, a field of red-top clover in bloom. Both of these were so often seen in that journey of mine, as almost to induce the fancy of passing through Eden. I question whether...
