Kate survived the unspeakable horror that was her first marriage.

Wade was frightening enough that she changed her name and left the States and rebuilt her life half way around the world, running a small business in Bali.

Now, fourteen years later, her second husband – Australian lawyer, Lex Matlock - is dead in a car accident.

In Australia, trying to sort out Lex's estate, Kate has a chilling encounter with a stranger on a lonely roadside. Then, a body is found hanging in the bush outside Lex's beach house...

Though it seems unlikely, she cannot help but fear Wade has somehow found her after all these years.

Kate tells herself not to panic, not to throw it all away. This doesn't have to be about her. Lots of people have secrets. Maybe Lex had them too.

His death might have seemed an accident, but it was certainly odd. So is the behaviour of his friends.

As Kate delves deeper into Lex's background, she begins to wonder whose past she needs to fear most.
